

Our Philosophical Beliefs

- We believe that education is most meaningful when it is rooted in our identity in Christ and leads us into deeper relationship with Him.
- We believe that learning happens outside of school and those achievements should be recognized and celebrated.
- We believe that students need teachers whose primary passion is relationships with students.
- We believe that while the environment outside of children and youth has changed over time, their internal needs remain the same: deep relationships with others who love them and a safe and creative space within which to learn about the world.

- We believe that the power of digital tools is the ability to personalize student learning and free teachers and students to engage in deeper, experiential learning and rich conversation.
- We believe that the world has changed more rapidly than our current educational system.
- We believe that students can and should be empowered to take ownership of their learning.
- We believe that at its best, education teaches children how to live a meaningful life, not just make a living.
- We believe that education occurs in community and students thrive when their community works together to see them flourish.
- We believe that students should have a clear, personalized learning path with unique goals and supportive assessment.
- We believe that learning happens most authentically when it's experienced.
